Here is a section of a letter Nicole sent last winter, while serving in India:

Many of you know that one of the ways to get the attention of a village, is for Steve to fly in with a paraglider. He is one of the missionaries I am serving with. Just before I came home, he crashed and fell approximately 40 feet. Praise God that he regained consciousness and with the help of villagers from two near by villages, we were able to get him back down the mountain, where we then drove 2 1/2 hours to the nearest hospital. Steve is doing well, as you know from his recent visit to our church.

Many of these people, due to the remote locations where they live, very rarely see visitors. I always tote something along to hand out to the children, whether its balloons, candy, bubble wands or small toys, you should see their little faces, and even the faces of their parents, the gratitude and appreciation is overwhelming and I cannot possibly describe in words. Forming these relationships, is not just about a small gift. It’s about showing these people we love and value them so much, which paves the way for us to share with them how Jesus loves them and values them vastly more.

That being said, the obvious eye catcher is the paraglider. The way God is using something so unconventional and unique to reach people in even the most remote places in India, literally takes my breath away. This ministry is something I never dreamed I would be a part of, and I feel unbelievably blessed to be an instrument of the Lord in something as amazing as this:

“You will go out in joy and be led forth in peace; the mountains and the hills will burst into song before you.” Isaiah 55:12

These mountains in India, the people living in the villages within them, these remote places, the Lord is reaching them; and they will burst out in song and praise for the Lord our God.

Nicole

Nicole is returning to India: September 5th - December 14th.
Continue to pray for her as she prepare for this ministry.
If the Lord leads you to help with her tickets and her living expenses while she lives in India, please mark your gift (Nicole’s Mission Trip).
